Less work, more comfort. It's a softer life with a Solid State Apache.

Ah, the soft life. It's the ease of just turning a crank to make a compact trailer turn into a big, easy campsite. It's the extra comfort and protection you enjoy inside your Apache, surrounded by solid walls molded of rugged A-Bi thermoc-plastic—instead of the usual canvas. With a double-thick, insulated roof over you.

It's the practical features that Solid State construction makes possible. Like solid windows that slide open for ventilation. And Nainbrite draperies that slide over the windows for privacy. It's the security of a lockable, all-metal, screened door.

Turn-opening screened door has an automobile translucent panel for privacy.

It's the pleasure of stretching out on soft foam mattresses and cushions. And standing straight up when you work in the galley, because the cabinets are a full 33" high.

It's the convenience of standconverter that hooks up to camp-ground electricity, or to your car battery when you're miles from the nearest power line. And, a power ventilator that whisks away smoke, odors and excess humidity.

Stand from "converter" gets 110-V power into 12-V for lights and accessories.

Power ventilator adds to your comfort by keeping inside air fresh and clean.

It's the contentment of knowing that when the trip is over, you won't have to spend all your spare time taking care of your Apache. Those tough ABS surfaces, for instance, will stay looking new for years with a minimum of upkeep—soap and water does it nicely.

Trailer body panels are alum-

Storage space. It's one thing you get plenty of in a Solid State Apache.

inum. So are the interior cabinets. Floors are covered with easy-cleaning cushion vinyl. Sinks are gleaming stainless steel. Mattress covers are stain resistant. Table and cabinet tops have a finish that resists practically everything.

About the hardest thing to do is deciding which of the four new Solid State Apaches is for you.
